The Battle of Seven Pines.

Correspondence of the Alexandria Gazette.] Having just returned from a visit to the old battle field of "Seven Pines," I feel it DESCRIPTION FRAMES, MOLDINGS, &c. would not be a waste of words, particularly to the survivors of the old Seventeenth Virginia regiment, to recall a few incidents of that bloody battle-one of the most hotly contested of the war, for the numbers engaged. Well, the Seventeenth, with Gen. Jeseph E. Johnston's command, reached the vicinity of Richmond, from the Peninsula campaign, on May 17th, 1862, and went into With a full complement of tents and other conveniences we were enabled to make ourselves fairly comfortable, except during the frightful thunder and rain storm that overwhelmed and submerged our camping grounds on the afternoon and night of the 30 h of May and which continued from 5 o'clock until 11 at night. An hour latter, at midnight, a courier with orders dashed to our camp; a few moments later the "long roll" was sounded, rations were issued and the men notified to be ready to move in the morning. We got off at half-past five, and marched down the Williamsburg road and halted about five miles from the city, rangements to which her delicate system is liable. Many women in the land who are acquainted with Dr. Pierce only through his "Favorite Prescription," bless him with all their hearts, for he has brought them the on the left of the road, when orders were read from Gen. Johnston, from which we inferred that we had business ahead. Then our old commander, Col. M. D. Corse, went from one company to another and delivered a charge to each in feeling words which can never beforgotten. At 12 o'clock we moved ternal cancer, and other ailments. Price reduced to one dollar. By druggists. lown the road about a mile and filed to the right, where we were held in reserve. In a short time the enemy on our left was opened upon by artillery; soon the skirmishing began, and later the rat The good qualities of the above machines are now well established.

We are selling them at as low a price as they can be parchased in any of the larger cities, and are prepared to allow as much for old machines of any kind as is possible.

We have seen so much good done by the "Domestic," that we wish every family to have at least one in their house. Prices fixed, but terms accommodating. tie of musketry and the roar of can non rapidly extended to right and left At 4 o'clock, p. m., a courier dashed up withorders, "Kemper's brigade to the front!" "Fall in old Seventeenth!" responded Col. Corse; "attention company!" shouted the capini s, and in a moment every man was at his post; the command, "forward; quick time!" was given and off we marched at a rapid pace about a mile down the Williamsburg road under a heavy fire of artillery from the redoubt that commanded the road. It was a fearful sight to see the wounded coming out and the dead scattered in every direction, but we had no time for sentiment and on we pushed at a double quick, un-mindful of the storm of shot, shell and cannister; filed to the right, directly in front Wholesale and Retail Declers in of the Barker House and rushed in orward right into the enemy's camp. At this critical moment their reserves coming up poured into our ranks a deadly fire, but we instant ly got to work. It was just as we formed our line of battle and pushed onward that our intrepid color-bearer, Sergeant William T. Morrill, with the battle-flag of our regiment well to the front, fell mortally wounded, and while still holding that old emblem in his weakening grasp shouted "Forward in his weakening grasp shouted "Forward men!" Capt, Raymond Fairfax caught the staff before the flag sank to the ground and handed it to Corporal Diggs, one of the color guard, who, also, was shot down, when it Company E., who carried it safely through (but only to fall in a later battle). Our loss in that charge and that storm of leath was 75 killed and wounded; brave, noble, gallant comrades, who knew only duty and fell in its pathway. We held the enemy's breastworks, fortifications and camp, and repulsed them in every attempt bey made to recover them. They still ocupied the woods 300 yards in rear of their captured camps, and it being important to distodge them a portion of our brigade was erdered to flank the position, which they soon accomplished, and we all advancing simultaneously cleared them out. Our reg-iment occupied a line immediately in the rear of their deserted camp, and as it was a very marshy place the position was anything deep in some places. At 9 p. m. we were relieved and moved back, when the men supplied themselves from the captured commissary stores which Casey's division left in their flight. The dead and dying were strewn around in every direction. Friend and foe, the dead, the wounded, the dying, together lay, undistinguishable in the darkness of the night. S. F. DYSON,

(Co. C.). Fairfax Rifles (Co. D.). Prince William Rifles (Co. F.) and Warrenton Rifles (Co. K.)—how we all stood shoulder to shoulder and touched elbows on many a hotly-contested battle field.

The morning of June 1st dawned upon us, and all expected to again join in a deadly conflict, but with the exception of some brisk cannonading and skirmishing it was comparatively quiet in our front. The early part of the morning was spent in burying our fallen comrades. Every man was quietly leid to rest in his soldier's grave. I assisted in burying Lient. Gray, and also Lunt, Murray, Higdon and Whittington. We put them to rest in the centre of the captured redoubt, or fort, which we then occupied. Wm. Lunt and J. S. Murray were killed in the enemy's camp and fell in our front lines. Wm. J. Higdon was shot in the forehead: this gallant soldier voluntarily joined in this fight (he being on other detail). Rhodie Whittington had joined his company only the day before he was killed, having left Alexandria but a short time before. Only a few moments before the fatal charge the writer talked with him; he was bright and anxious for the fray. I cut a lock from his hair, for his mother, just before laying him in the grave by his comrades. Tenderly did we lay them to rect, side by side. Oh that sad Sabbath day; who can forget it! The salutes fired above them were the shotted guns of war, and Col. Corse read the burisl service on that solemn occasion. We remained in and around the trenches until Monday morning, June 24, and at 20 'clock a. m. marched back to our encampment near Richmond. NEWS DEALER AND STATIONER.
